Rand Paul's Recent Remarks Raise New Concerns

By Michael Collins Piper

In early November, just after AMERICAN FREE PRESS went to press, AFP discovered some unsettling new details that raise more questions as to where Senator-elect Rand Paul (R-Ky.) really stands on the issues.

AFP has expressed hope that Paul would be a positive force in the U.S. Senate, unlike his father (R-Texas) — despite the youngest Paul's earlier campaign rhetoric rattling the saber at Iran, reflecting the warmongering attitudes of the "neo-conservatives" who are trying to force an American attack on Iran. But recent comments by Rand Paul in an interview with The Wall Street Journal suggest Paul is repudiating other views of many in the "tea party" movement nationwide that rallied behind Paul and his father.

On Nov. 8 The Wall Street Journal — published by media titan Rupert Murdoch (whose rise to power came through the combined forces of the Rothschild-Bronfman-Oppenheimer network) — featured an interview with Rand Paul conducted by Matthew Kaminski.

Although Paul promised that he didn't plan on being "bashful," he emphasized that he is "not that crazy" when asked if he were "a crazy libertarian." Kaminski added:

> He has made other concessions to the mainstream. He now avoids his dad's talk of shutting the Federal Reserve and abolishing the income tax. In a bigger shift from his campaign pledge to end earmarks, he tells me that they are a bad "symbol" of easy spending but that he will fight for Kentucky's share of earmarks and federal pork, as long as it's doled out transparently at the committee level and not parcelled in the dead of night. "I will advocate for Kentucky's interests," he said.

Rand Paul was seemingly changing his tune when talking with the insider-controlled "voice of Wall Street" a matter of concern, but, obviously, as the saying goes: "By their fruits, ye shall know them." Time will tell.

The "fruits" will be Paul's actions — and votes — as a member of the Senate which will demonstrate where he really stands on the issues. All concerned Americans need to keep the heat on Paul and all other Congressmen to restore constitutional principles and bring the real change for which grassroots Americans have loudly clamored.

Tea Party Entangled With Warmongers

SHARRON ANGLE

RAND PAUL

CHRISTINE O'DONNELL

Tea party candidates like those above were all Israel firsters and have advocated Israel's viewpoint vis-a-vis Iran. America's Jewish lobby is thrilled by their rhetoric — and they are thrilled to receive its blessings.

By Texe Marrs

Consider the two following scenarios: A pilot whose plane is lost somewhere over the Pacific Ocean, flying with a defunct navigation system, is on the radio to anyone who will listen and says: "I don't know where I am going, but at least I'm making good time." Many in today's tea parties aimlessly say to a corrupt Washington, D.C.: "We don't know how and where you should cut spending, but we demand you cut our taxes and slash spending." In either case, a wise person can predict the outcome: "Disaster just ahead."

The tea party debacle is a sad situation. Such promise, such great tactics, such incredibly poor strategy, such a horrible failure coming right up. The tea parties are a great idea gone horribly wrong.

Time, the people are angry and fed up. They're staging a long-needed popular rebellion, demanding taxes be cut and spending be slashed. The tea parties managed to get quite a few of their candidates elected this year to enter a corrupt and indifferent Congress. But now what?

NO PLAN, NO SPECIFICS

In fact, the tea parties have no real plan and offer no specifics. Winning a few hard-fought elections is all well and good, but there is not going to be much follow-up. Republican legislators who won their seats thanks to tea party activism have nowhere to go once they take office. Some might say they should all act as "Dr. No's" — meaning that they ought to simply vote "no" on any major spending measures. But which — and how much — spending are they going to cut? The silence is deafening.

MOST ARE WARMONGERS

How about all those trillions of dollars for bloody, expensive wars and bogus homeland security? Well, think, folks — most tea party people are actually pro-war and pro-homeland security. In fact, the most ardent members of the tea party are your typical pro-Bush, pro-Cheney, pro-Zionist neo-conservatives. They bought into the ridiculous rhetoric of terrorist review of 9-11. Many actually are convinced that Bush did an honorable thing in cranking up wars in Iraq, Afghanistan and Pakistan.

Sadly, most tea party people lean toward warmongering. The fact that thousands of young American soldiers are dead, and thousands more are maimed for life, does not seem to phase them. They have little or no sympathy for the hundreds of thousands of innocent Iraqis, Afghanis and Pakistanis who were slain, tortured and maimed by American bombs and bullets.

From what I can discern, most tea party activists don't mind much, if at all, that the U.S. government has shoveled some $4 trillion into these wars and billions of dollars in foreign aid to the wealthy nation of Israel, among others. Apparently they have no problem with the huge bloated military budget that has resulted.

No one in the tea party leadership — and very few of the rank and file — is hollering "Cut military spending; stop these futile, unnecessary, unconstitutional wars; bring our troops home from the 130 countries overseas where they are stationed!"

POLICE STATE CONTINUES

Likewise, the gullible among the tea party faithful actually believe the laughable myth that 19 inept Arabs and a shadowy mastermind walking on a cane and living in a cave, Osama bin Laden, pulled off 9-11 and that "domestic terrorists" surround us on every street corner.

The tea party Republicans — most of whom adored President Bush and Vice President Cheney — have no problem with the tens of billions thrown to the winds each year in building up a Big Brother police state. They agree with the un-American idea of giving up freedoms in exchange for protection from "those terrorists." They think you can protect freedom by giving it up.

If these two areas alone — military war spending and big-brother homeland security spending — were cut, America could solve its deficit problem and taxes could be reduced. But — pardon my Texas dialect — "it ain't gonna happen," because too many tea partiers tolerate worthless wars and seem generously flag-waving about spending billions on homeland security.

Can you name one tea party leader — be it a local leader or Sarah Palin, Glenn Beck, Newt Gingrich, John McCain, or any of the tea party candidates — who are publicly demanding the Feds slash war and Big-Brother spending? No, in fact, they are fervent supporters of such spending. Some even want the U.S. to attack Iran, to stop the "new Hitler," President Ahmadinejad. Most see nothing wrong with the Feds torturing suspects, slamming citizens into gulag prison cells, censoring the Internet, checking our mail or wiretapping our phones. Ending the Federal Reserve is not even mentioned.

WHAT ABOUT RAND PAUL?

Yes, Texan Rep. Ron Paul will vote against such wasteful spending on wars and surveillance. But a number of tea partiers have given him the cold shoulder. Obviously, the tea party organizers, who are warmongers, don't like Ron Paul.

Then there's Rand Paul, of course, Ron's son — a tea party favorite who was elected to the Senate representing Kentucky. Why do a number of tea partiers support Rand and not Ron? Because Rand's campaign webpage outlines his undying support for Israel. Translated: Give the Jews what they want — Middle East wars, foreign aid, etc.

WHAT SPENDING CUTS?

Please tell me, where are all these spending cuts going to come from? While some in the tea party rank-and-file are angry over the illegal alien invasion, we are not seeing a clamor by most tea party leaders and speakers demanding that all illegal aliens be deported, so we can save billions spent on illegal aliens' welfare, education and healthcare. Sure, the tea partiers want to "secure the borders" and stop more illegal aliens, but what about the 35 million-plus illegal aliens already inside our borders?

Nor is anyone in the tea party movement naming even one federal bureau or agency that should be shut down, even as the federal workforce drastically inflates.

But wait, someone has come up with specifics on where and what to cut. The political establishment — Democrat and Republican — has solved it. Let's just cut "entitlements," they are saying in unison. Let's take it from the working folks. Wars and big brother are fine, you see. But let's axe grandma's Medicare and Social Security.

Yes, their solution is to slash the Social Security and Medicare benefits of the tens of millions of loyal Americans who, for all their working lives, poured chunks of their earnings into this program.

And don't say you didn't ask for it, tea partiers. You fiercely demanded unspecified spending cuts — and the elite prepared a trap for you. America is being Reconstructed, hear-down to Third World status, and you had no idea where all your complaints and protests were taking you.

The governing elite used and abused you. They knew all along what they had planned. You folks demanded they cut spending but you left it open as to where to cut. So cutting your future entitlements, and those of your parents and grandparents, is just the thing to help "reduce red ink."

Now don't get me wrong. Actually, overall spending for entitlement programs will increase. It has to in order to enable the government to redistribute your paid-in monies to the foreigners illegally in America. These illegal aliens are soon going to be made "instant citizens."

That's right — already Obama and Congress have said that over the next decade, $800 billion should be taken from native-born American citizens' paid-in Social Security and Medicare and spent instead on "ObamaCare," with a lot going to illegal aliens for health benefits.

Torture by U.S. troops and the killing of innocent men, women and children on foreign soil is something many tea party activists don't mind spending for.

YOU ASKED FOR IT, YOU GOT IT

Tea partiers: You wanted to continue the stupid and unnecessary wars in the Middle East, so you are going to get them. You wanted tens of billions for a police state? You're going to get it. Somebody has to pay for it all, so don't complain when you discover that your hard-earned Social Security and Medicare benefits perform a magical shrinking act.

Don't moan and whine when the military budget goes through the roof, either. The illegal wars and torture gulags that you support — in Iraq, Afghanistan, Pakistan, and soon in Syria and Iran, are going to be expensive. And Israel wants billions more U.S. bucks stuffed into its pockets, so shut up and pay up.

Yes, tea partiers, you got what they slash your Social Security and Medicare; the federal government will still be in red ink up to its ears. That is why your tea party pals, Beck and Bill O'Reilly, have proposed a new national sales tax and a value added tax. These will go on top of today's already outrageously high income taxes.

The Republican and Democrat parties thank you, tea partiers, for making all this possible — for putting popular pressure behind enlarging the status quo. Welcome to the new and improved New World Order.
